Henry Bergman Commits Suicide in the Grand Union Hotel.

Fired a Pistol Bullet Into His Brain.

End of a Career in Which a Pretty Woman Figured.

Henry Bergman, manager of a clothing business at 256 Broadway, was found dead in his room at the Grand Union Hotel this morning by Margaret McSally, the chamber-maid.

Mr. Bergman registered at the Grand Union at 9 o'clock last evening. At 9:30, he, the half boy, responding to his call, took two bottles of beer to the room, which was No. 3. on the second floor. That was the last seen of him alive.

When the chambermaid opened his door she found the body lying on the floor, with a pistol-shot wound over the right temple. A 22-caliber Smith and Wesson revolver was still tightly clenched in the right hand.

He had evidently stood before the mirror to make sure and fired the shot. He had been dead many hours.

Henry Bergman was about fifty-five years old. He had lived at the Gedney House for nearly a year and was of a reserved disposition.

He was a man of distinguished appearance, always tastefully dressed. He was partly of negro and wore heavy iron-gray mitstache.

Two or three times a week a stylish equipage stopped before the Gedney House. A beautiful, yellow-haired young woman invariably occupied the carriage, and she was always readily joined by Mr. Bergman.

Occasionally, too, this young woman dined with Mr. Bergman at the Gedney. She was his constant companion.

Her name is given as Nellie Harrington.
She is said to have once been a actress.

At one time for nearly two years she and Henry Bergman occupied a flat at 214 West Forty-second street. But they quarreled frequently, says the garrulous janitor at the flat, and this lovely young woman was always accused of drinking by Bergman on such occasions.

A year ago a querrel ended in a separation.
Then it was that Bergman took up his home at the Gedney. After a time the blonde reappeared on the scene as stated.

An EVENING World reporter traced Miss Harrington to 255 West Thirty-ninth street, where, according to the janitors, she lived with Mrs. Raymond. But both women had gone to the country a week ago, notably knowing where.

The other occupants of the flat professed to know nothing about Nellie Harrington.

On the person of Henry Bergman was found by the police a jury notice, a Jury Commissioner's certificate that Henry Bergman had served as a trial juror during the month of March, and a letter signed Dr. Vanderpool stating that Henry Bergman was under treatment for bladder trouble.

At the Gedney House it was stated that Bergman was a man of cheerful temperament, and that apparently his relations with the yellow-haired young female friend were the pleasantest.

He seemed to think a great deal of her, said the clerk. "I have noticed no dependency on his part, and can conceive of no reason for his suddenly. Of course we knew nothing of Miss Harrington, and I never suspected that they were married, nor that there was any other than a friendly relation between them. She was a pretty woman and dressed with quiet and elegant taste."

Bergman and his personal belongings and always had plenty of money. I suppose he was in good circumstances."
